RULES FOR THE PRONUNCIATION OF FOREIGN AND CLASSICAL WORDS.

Adapted from the Introduction to COOLEY'S Comprehensive Dictionary of the English Language.

FOREIGN WORDS.

FOREIGN WORDS which are not anglicised or familiarised by long use, are pronounced by educated Englishmen, as nearly as possible, in the same manner as they are in the countries to which the languages in which they occur belong.

The following Tables exhibit the usual sounds of the letters in the leading European languages so far as they differ from the English. The English 'equivalents' given in these Tables are, in some cases, merely approximations to the sounds referred to; since several foreign sounds can only be accurately conveyed by a living teacher.

Vowels.

A has usually the sound of 'a' in far, father; or when short, nearly that of 'a' in fat; never that of 'ä' in fate.

a, Fr., has always the sound of 'a' in har, far, &c.

E generally sounds like 'a' in mate; but not unfrequently like the 'e' in met, pet.

é, Fr., has the sound of 'a' in day when rapidly uttered:—è, that of 'e' in hest, often approaching closely to the 'a' in mate:—ê, that of 'e' in there, or 'a' in mare:—e (unaccented), that of êh (nearly = 'u' in but, fur); or it is wholly silent, and always so when final in a word or syllable after a consonant preceded by a vowel, and at the end of words of two or more syllables.

I has usually the sound of 'e' in treat, or of 'i' in magazine; and not unfrequently that of 'i' in fig; never that of 'i' in pine. I final, in Fr., is, like the Eng. 'y,' equivalent to the 'brief' or 'alphabetic' e.

O has nearly the same sounds as in English; heard in bone, not, nor. In Swedish and Norwegian, that of ô or oo. In Fr., when preceded by a consonant, and followed by a long or circumflexed vowel, it has sometimes a sound resembling 'w,' as in poêle (pwâle).

ô, Fr., is always long and open.

U has generally the sound of ô or oo, heard in mood, and in foot and bull. In Dutch and Fr., long u or û has a sound between that of ô and ê, arising from an attempt to pronounce these vowels simultaneously, during which the lips are 'contracted,' nearly as for whistling, instead of being protruded, as for the Eng. ô. This u nearly resembles that in the Scotch word 'gude.' The short Fr. u also somewhat partakes of this peculiarity.

Y, Dan., Norwegian, and Swedish, resembles the Fr. u; in Dutch, it sounds like the long Eng. i (î); whilst in the other continental languages, it is equivalent to the foreign 'i' (that is, the Eng. ë), noticed above.

Diphthongs and Vowel-digraphs.

Æ, æ, ä, are generally sounded like 'a' in fate; but sometimes short, like 'e' in met. In Dutch, like the 'a' in bar or father.

æu, äu, Ger., sound somewhat like 'oi' or 'oy,' in oil and toy; but with a peculiar modification derived from the initial vowel, and which renders the sound triphthongal.

ai, ay, are generally sounded like the long Eng. i (î); but in Fr., like 'a' in fate or laid.

au has generally the sound of 'on' or 'ow,' heard in our, power; but in Fr., that of ô.

Eau, Fr., resembles au (Fr.), equivalent to ô.

ei, ey, are generally pronounced like the long diphthongal Eng. 'a,' heard in aye, day, bare, when fully and slowly pronounced. In Fr., they have a sound closely resembling the 'a' in fate; in Ger. that of the long Eng. i (î).

eu, Fr., has three gradations of sound, varying from the 'i' in sir, or the 'u' in but or muff, to the 'e' in her, or 'n' in fur; as heard in the Fr. words meute, jeune, and peur or mineur, but in each slightly longer. In Ger., these letters sound like 'oi' or 'oy' in boil, toy.

Ie, ie, î, usually sound like ê or ee in beat and feet; but in Fr., before r final they are either separately pronounced (= e-â), or nearly coalesce, as in Eng., to form a diphthong (= yâ), changing in many Fr. substantives to -êre or -ê-er.

Oe, ô, in the Germanic languages are somewhat like the Fr. 'eu,' or the 'e' in her, combining the sound of the short guttural 'n' in tub, and the 'e' in met, with a slight accent or stress on the first element or n, in Fr., oe is nearly similar to the 'a' in day

ou, ou, Fr., are nearly similar to 'eu' (Fr)

ou, Fr., sounds nearly like the 'wa' in wall or waft, or more correctly comes between the two, some times shortened to the like sound in was (wos) or warren (wor), but in a few words its sound resembles the Fr ai, or the 'a' in fate.

ou, Fr., is like 'oo' in fool and mood, and, in its shorter form, like 'oo' in foot and good, at the beginning of a word or syllable, when immediately followed by a vowel, its power generally closely resembles that of our initial w. In Celtic, it often sounds like short o

Ue, ue, ū, are generally sounded like the Fr u, but are sometimes silent

Ui, Ger., nearly resembles the Fr 'ui' or 'oui'

W, Welsh, in the middle, or towards the end of a word or syllable, sounds as oo or ou.

Consonants.

B, Ger. (at the end of words), sounds like the Eng. p, in modern Gr. and Russ., and in Sp. (when between two vowels), like v

C It., before e and i, sounds like the ch in chill, in the same position, in Sp., like z, or like the th in thin (but in the 'Catalan dialect' like s). In Ger., before e, i, and y, it sounds like the Ger z, or the Eng. ts. In Polish, in all positions like ts

D, Dutch, Ger. at the end of words, sounds like t, in Dan. and Sp., when occurring between two vowels, or at the end of words like th in this.

G is always 'hard,' as in gold, before a, o, and u, in Dan., Ger. Norwegian, and Polish, it is 'hard' in all positions and combinations, sometimes with a guttural sound. In Fr., Port., Sp. and Sw., before e, i, and y, it is like the g of these languages, in It., in the same position, it is like the Eng. j or soft g. In Dutch, in all positions, it sounds like a strongly aspirated h.

gu, Fr., Port., and Sp., even before e, i, and y, sounds like g hard.

H, Fr., It., Port., and Sp., is either wholly silent, or is very feebly aspirated. In the other continental European languages it sounds as in English. It is silent in all of them, when following a vowel in the same syllable, its office being merely to shew that the preceding vowel is 'long,' as in Bohn (böne)

J Fr., Port., has the sound of zh, equivalent to the s in pleasure, and the z in azure. In Sp., like z, it resembles a strongly aspirated h, in Dan., Dutch, Ger., It., Polish, Sw., and Norwegian, it is pronounced like the Eng. initial j

N or N, Fr. and Port. when final in a word or syllable, and not doubled, or followed by a vowel, has a feeble 'nasal' sound, or more accurately, imparts a nasal sound to the immediately preceding vowel, with a sort of aspirate or breathing, which in the 'notation' of words in which it occurs, is commonly represented by appending g, but in pronouncing these sounds, particularly in Fr words, care must be taken that the nasal tone rests in, and does not pass through the nose, and that the tongue be kept quiescent, and not carried back or pressed against the palate, as is done in articulating the Eng. -ng which is much more strongly 'nasal' than the Fr sounds referred to ñ, Sp., is similar to the Fr gn.

Qu, Fr., Port., and Sp., followed by any other vowel, has the sound of k, in the termination -que (Fr), the e final is also silent.

P, in all positions, is trilled like the initial r in Eng., but when initial, much more strongly

S between two vowels has generally the sound of z, in Ger., it is also often so when initial, in Hun., it sounds like the Ger sch.

F, Ger., sounds like the Eng f

W, in the Germanic languages, is nearly identical with the Eng v

X, Fr and Belg., has often the sound of s, as in Bruxelles (bröö-sel, Brussels Eng), Auxerre (-sair), &c., but in Fr., more generally that of k, subject to the same euphonic changes, as in English. In Port., it has the sound of sh, in Sp., generally that of a strongly aspirated h.

Z Ger and Sw., has the sound of ts, in It., that of ds

Combined and Double Consonants

Ch, Russ., Sp. (except in the dialect of 'Catalonia,' where it sounds h) has the sound of the Eng. ch (tsih) in church. In Celt. and It., it sounds like k, in Ger., Polish, and some other allied languages, like a strongly aspirated, guttural h, for which, in Eng. pronunciation of these words, k is usually substituted. In Fr. and Port., it has the sound of sh, the exceptions in Fr. being confined to words in which it occurs before i or r, and in a few words from the Gr., where it sounds hard, like k

Gh has usually the sound of g hard, as in ghost. In Celt., when final, it usually sounds like k gl, It., is a peculiar liquid sound, organically produced by putting the tongue in the position for l, and simultaneously raising the back part of it almost into the position for g or initial y before speaking. The effect is nearly the sound of -ly, with the l faintly given, and this sound is commonly substituted for it by the English, as in intaglio (tal-yo) ogho (öl-yo), &c.

gn, Fr and It., is a peculiar liquid sound formed from n in precisely the same manner as the It. gl is formed from l. The resulting sound is nearly that of -ny or of the -nv in convenient, and this sound is usually substituted for the former one in English mouths, as in Cognac (kön-yak)

Lh, Port., is identical with the It. gl.

ll, Fr., when preceded by i, and followed by a vowel either accented, or not mute, has, when properly and elegantly pronounced, precisely the sound of the It. gl; but colloquially, the greater number of French speakers, and foreigners who follow them, substitute a sort of 'whisper' or 'breathing' for the first element, and instead of mouille (mōōl-yā, with the l faint, but sounded), for instance, say mouille (mōōh-yā, in which the h represents the 'whisper' or 'breathing' just noticed; or even mōō-yā, without it). The true Sp. ll, the It. gl, and the Port. lh, are never thus corrupted by educated natives.—The true Welsh ll is a peculiar sound 'produced by placing the tongue in the position for l, and forcing a strong whisper, without any voice, out at the sides of the tongue, thus causing them to vibrate.' For this sound the English, and other people out of Wales, commonly substitute a single English l; but in a few proper names, a kind of compromise is made, as in Llanelly, Llangollen, &c., which are generally pronounced lan-eth'le, lan-goth'len, &c.

-ny, Ger., sounds nearly like the same combination in English.

Nh, Port., is identical in sound with the Fr. and It. gn, and the Sp. ñ.

Sch, D., resembles the Eng. sk; in Ger., it is like our sh.

ss, in Ger. and the allied languages, has the same sharp sound as in English.

sz, Ger. and Hun., sounds like s sharp or ss.

Th, in all the continental languages, except Gr., is pronounced like simple t. In Gr., it resembles the Eng. th.

tsch, Russ., is like ch in church.

Zz, It., usually sounds like ts.

French words, unlike the English, have no 'decided' accent. In pronouncing them, the syllables should be uttered with a nearly equal smoothness and fluency; merely observing to give a long or semi-long quantity to the vowel of the last syllable when a previous one is accented, in all such words as require it.

LATIN—GREEK—HEBREW.

The pronunciation of these languages adopted in England, as far as the sounds of the letters are concerned, and subject to a few exceptions, is the same as that of the modern English. These exceptions consist chiefly in the uniformity of sound given to the vowels, diphthongs, and vowel-digraphs, which are not liable to vary their sounds as in our own language: 'æ' and 'œ' being almost always sounded as ē—'ei,' as r—and 'i' final, in words, though unaccented, uniformly as long i (ī):—'en' sounds like ū; as does also 'ue,' except in certain positions in which it follows s, or another consonant, as in Suetonius, where it assumes the sound of u:—'oi' and 'oy,' when the vowels do not belong to separate syllables, have their usual diphthongal sound, as in English.

In respect to the Consonants in classical words, the English analogy is almost always followed:—O and g (except in Hebrew) are either soft or hard according to the vowels that follow them; and c, with s and t, are liable, in nearly all cases, to the same changes and aspiration, when preceded by the accent, and followed by i or e, and another vowel, as in English words:—G, in Hebrew, with a very few exceptions, is always 'hard':—Ph sounds as f; and, like th, if the first letter bō doubled, the p (or t) either loses its distinctness, or coalesces with the ph (or th) in utterance, as in Sappho, Matthew, &c.—Ch (except in cherub, cherubim, cherubic, and Rachel, where it sounds like the Eng. ch; that is, tsh) has always the sound of k.

-es, at the end of a word, sounds like -iz; as in ignes (-nēz).

-os, at the end of plural cases, is pronounced like ose, with the s sharp; as in nos (nōs), illos (-ōs).

The Accent, in Latin words of two syllables, is uniformly on the first syllable. In words of more than two syllables, if the 'penultima,' or vowel of the last syllable but one, is long, it is accented; but if it is short, the 'antepenultima,' or last syllable but two, is accented. When the 'penultima' is common, the accent, in prose, is upon the 'antepenultima.'

Hebrew words being chiefly received through the Greek of the 'Septuagint,' like Greek words, usually follow the analogy of the Latin.

In reference to 'quantity,' it may be observed that—1. A vowel before another vowel, in the same word, is short; 2. Diphthongs, not beginning with u, are long; 3. A vowel before j, x, or z, a doubled consonant, or any two consonants except a 'mute' and a 'liquid,' is long by 'position'; 4. A vowel before a 'mute' and a 'liquid,' as in cerebrum, tenebræ, &c., is either long or short.

Every Greek and Latin word has as many syllables as there are separate vowels and diphthongs. E final is always sounded:—The exceptions are—Scriptural names with a 'gentile' termination purely English, follow the English analogy: thus, in 'Gil'eadites,' 'Hit'tites,' 'Ess'enes,' 'Gadarenes,' -ites and -enes are pronounced in one syllable.
